Our December issue is all about celebratory foods, a “range war” peace treaty, the trendiness of kosher foods, the best hostess gifts, an egg nog memory, where to eat in Georgia, great recipes and even good reasons to think about building a garden folly!

At FLAVORS AND MORE Magazine we know that food memories and family memories are inseparable, which is why writer Kelley Lavin, the daughter of an Arizona cattleman, decided to go public with how her personal western range wars finally ended when she surrendered in a Florida country club to a plate of lamb. Horrors, read all about it.

Doc Lawrence finds food memories everywhere and this month his Gourmet Highway series takes him (and you) to out-of-the-way places to create your own palate legends in Georgia. Yum, ya’ll. Chef Judi Gallagher honors her mother’s egg nog with a recipe and she also offers a step-by-step method to preparing the world’s best prime rib. Absolutely b-e-s-t!

Herb Gardener talks about a very old, newly trendy food - kosher and reminds us that kosher is both a verb and a noun. Marsha Fottler has the best hostess gifts to give and get this season and design writer Steven V. Philips is dreaming the chilly days away in his fantasy garden folly. You’ll definitely want to start designing your own folly – after, of course, you learn what a folly might be. Steven V. explains it all.
